A: Just to give another answer: In case you want to do it with regex, you could split lines and remove first word in every line, when there is a space between two consecutive numbers. // for example, you can split lines with space after numbers // and remove first word in each line `String[] input = yourInput.split("\\s+");` Then you can put them back to your string. `String output = ""; for (String item : input) { if (item.contains("100")) { output += "Años desnudos " + item.substring(8) + ". "; } }` is simultaneously inferred by the chemometric procedure for a maximum number of days, and thus the predictive capability of the output model may be strongly improved. There may be various causes for this trend. A first possibility is that a higher number of individuals and days may actually lead to a better sampling of the chemical profile of the mosquito's habitat [\[CR34\]](#), [\[CR35\]](#). A second possible explanation is that the inferences of the predictive model for a greater number of days are based on the model selected as optimal for the previous 15 days or more. Thus, in this step, the information provided by the mid-week sampling days was reflected in the model selection. This is, in turn, reflected by the lower adjusted R^2 . Finally, the traditional strategy for short-term predictions (across few consecutive days) may be more appropriate, as it allows the capture of the variance in the short term. Publisher's Note

A: If you load the data with tge stream handler, you can do something like this:

CSampler sampler = new CSampler(tmpTable); IList list =
sampler.GetSamples(); if (list.Count > 0) { var first = list[0]; if (first.TblName ==
"clients") {
Console.WriteLine(first.TblName); } else
if (first.TblName == "tasks") {
Console.WriteLine(first.TblName); } else
if (first.TblName == "ticker") { Console.WriteLine(first.TblName);
