Adenomyotic ovarian cysts: clinical and imaging features. Adenomyotic ovarian cysts (AOC) are a benign ovarian tumor in approximately 1% of reproductive age women. To our knowledge, published series describe only 34 cases of AOC. We report the case of a 40-year-old woman with a 2-year history of bilateral adnexal masses with early onset of symptoms. Magnetic resonance imaging and color Doppler ultrasonography diagnosed an extensive bilateral ovarian cystic mass, richly vascularized and containing internal septa, and hypervascularization of the mass was confirmed by angiography. At surgery, bilateral AOC were identified. The multiloculated nature of AOC should be considered when considering both imaging and operative findings, for differential diagnosis of other multiloculated ovarian tumors such as mucinous and serous cystadenomas. Although AOC has been described as an intramural reproductive tumor that is more common in young women, and is associated with persistent and recurrent adenomyosis, we were able to find no previous reports of a patient presenting with symptoms of this rare disease at a very advanced age. Six months ago, many believed that HP would not survive it, but the

This study investigated the fracture resistance of repaired single-canal teeth with either a fiber-reinforced composite (FRC) post or intraradicular stainless steel (SS) post-and-core. Forty sound premolars were selected for this study. Teeth were divided into four groups according to the post used: (1) fiber-reinforced composite (FRC) post, (2) FRC post, (3) intraradicular SS, and (4) intraradicular SS. All teeth were divided into two subgroups according to the post and core configurations: (1) FRC post and FRC core and (2) intraradicular SS. All samples were restored with a complete two-surface Class III resin composite build-up (Sof-Lex, 3M ESPE, St. Paul, MN, USA). Posts were cemented to the teeth with resin cement. The FRC post was luted using the adhesive system
