DESCRIPTION
(Applicant's Abstract): Dendritic cells (DCs) are a unique population of antigen presenting cells that play a crucial role in the initiation and regulation of immune responses.
Dendritic cells are normally found in the spleen and lymph nodes where they can present antigen to T cells. Recently, dendritic cells have been identified in the lung and the respiratory tract. Much is known about the characteristics and role of dendritic cells in the immune system. However, very little is known about how the lung forms dendritic cells or their role in the lung. The primary objective of this project is to define the cellular and molecular mechanisms by which dendritic cells are formed in the lung. This will be accomplished through the use of recombinant DNA technology and monoclonal antibodies. The specific aims are to: 1. identify cells that are homologous to dendritic cells in the lung. 2. identify the gene(s) that encode for the major dendritic cell surface antigens. 3. identify the antigen(s) presented by dendritic cells in the lung. 4. identify cell surface receptors that are expressed on dendritic cells in the lung.

Once the molecular mechanisms and factors involved in the formation of dendritic cells in the lung have been defined, it will be possible to design strategies for the modulation of dendritic cell function in the lung. Ultimately,

You need to look after your PC well to keep it in good working condition. Here are some tips that can help you to keep it clean and running smoothly:

- Avoid stockpiling too much data on your PC This means that the hard drive has to work harder and slower than it should, which results in slower work. If you use your PC to send or receive a lot of emails, you should make sure that your PC has a fast network connection and a fast Internet connection. If you do not have a fast Internet connection and you spend a lot of time online, try to increase the amount of data that you download or upload.
- Use solid-state drives (SSDs) If you have a modern PC, you should install an SSD in it. This means that your PC will perform better and run faster. You should make sure that your PC has plenty of memory to keep your files and programs organized. The better you organize the files and programs on your computer, the faster your PC will work.
- Run regular scans If you have spyware or malware on your PC, it might slow it down
