Antipsychotic effects of the muscarinic antagonist 4-diphenylacetoxy-N-methylpiperidine in mice. 4-Diphenylacetoxy-N-methylpiperidine (4-DAMP) was evaluated in mice in tests predictive of its antipsychotic activity in man. The effects of drug-induced changes in spontaneous activity, tremors, catalepsy and inhibition of climbing were tested after acute intraperitoneal administration. The drug had little effect in the spontaneous activity test. It dose-dependently decreased the tremor induced by amphetamine, 4-DAMP and haloperidol decreased catalepsy induced by amantadine. The compound did not elicit catalepsy with L-Dopa or with apomorphine. Moreover, 4-DAMP did not alter the effects of apomorphine in mice. The drug was found to inhibit the spontaneous activity of mice in an experimental condition in which spontaneous movement is established in the absence of drug-induced motor activity. 4-DAMP at the highest dose used (0.2 mg/kg) was without effect in a model in which drug-induced motor activity was established. 4-DAMP also blocked the clonic convulsions induced by bicuculline in mice, but had little influence on the apomorphine induced, Pentylentetrazole-induced seizures. The compound had minimal anticonvulsant effect, while this effect was seen after the same dose of haloperidol and atropine. The results indicate that 4-DAMP has antipsychotic properties, particularly related to amantadine-like activity. Imaging microcirculatory derangements following endotoxin administration in newborn piglets using laser Doppler perfusion monitoring. To determine the extent of vascular derangements in the skin following endotoxin infusion in newborn piglets using laser Doppler perfusion monitoring. Piglets (1-2 days old) were anesthetized and artificially ventilated. Thirty micrograms of E. coli endotoxin (LPS) was infused IV over a 30-min period. We developed a laser Doppler perfusion monitoring system utilizing a 670-nm laser and a photodiode array to record microcirculatory perfusion (perfusion units [PU]) by observing temporal and spatial variations in red blood cell flux and by recording optical changes at the skin surface. After 1 h of LPS infusion

Growth and development of the dentition in children with cystic fibrosis. Few studies have evaluated the dentition in children with cystic fibrosis (CF). We wanted to determine growth and development of the primary and permanent dentition in children with CF. We also wanted to correlate this with the frequency of respiratory disease. We examined 45 children with CF (mean age 9.8 years), all clinically stable, to determine growth and development of their primary and permanent dentitions. Oral examinations and lateral cephalometric radiographs were performed. Growth and development of the primary dentition was found to be delayed in these children. Children who had an airway clearance-training program had more episodes of respiratory infections (p The aim of this study is to analyze the effects of alcohol consumption on markers of thrombin generation and fibrinolysis in experimental infection (Tick-borne encephalitis). We hypothesized that alcohol consumption significantly affects the progression of infection through increased thrombin generation and decreased fibrinolysis. In a prospective, randomized, placebo-controlled, double-blinded clinical study, we analyzed the effects of alcohol consumption on the progression of tick-borne encephalitis (TBE) using the following markers of thrombin generation: prothrombin fragment 1+2 (F1+2), thrombin-antithrombin complex (TAT), [d-Dimer] and tissue plasminogen activator (t-PA); and on the markers of fibrinolysis: tissue-type plasminogen activator (t-PA), plasminogen activator inhibitor-1 (PAI-1), and D-dimer. We enrolled 93 adult patients with TBE and 87 healthy subjects into the study. Alcohol consumption was verified by self-report and plasma ethanol concentrations were measured at admission. The study was carried out from March 2010 to May 2011. Participants were randomized into one of three groups: patients with TBE who consumed alcohol (TBE+Alcohol), those who did not consume alcohol (TBE-Alcohol), and healthy subjects with no history of alcohol consumption
