I've made a web page and I want it to work from both public and private IPs. The web page is in html and has Node.js and MongoDB at its backend. The web page is set to use a login page that is integrated with the page itself. I'm having a hard time deciding where to save the login information:

Can I save the login information in the backend (MongoDB)? Can I save the login information in a localhost.js or something like that? When I change my password, does the user have to log in every time or I can just save the old login information and new login information at some point (along with the new password)? A: Normally, when you want to be sure of security, you will have all your login information in only one place. Usually, it's in database. So: when user has login/password, you're just reading record from database. when user wants to change password, you're writing record in database and check if existing user with same login/password exists (if yes - you redirect user to new login page). So, you'll never read old login/passwords from your web server (web server always have private IP). If you need it, you'll only have knowledge of user's login and password, not password itself (so, user won't be able to intercept/change password). Also, you can't have 2 users with the same login and password. Q:

Florida in the opening weekend of the 2018 season has been canceled. The announced reason for the cancellation is the potential for the 2018 MLB's Opening Day Game to be delayed one week due to a wild card scenario, which is likely to leave

Atlanta in the dark about the official start of spring. Should the wild-card game be delayed further, a game against a non-conference opponent, like FSU or Cincinnati, will be played with Georgia's regular-season opener on Aug. 31 instead. The NFL is also studying a possible change to kick-off times as part of its planned broadcast blackout in London. The change would require London games to start at 2 p.m. local time, rather than 4 p.m., in order to accommodate fans in Europe, and the same is expected to happen in the NCAA Football Championship semifinals and the Super Bowl. "My thoughts and prayers go out to the Georgia players, coaches, and staff," McGarity said. "As a former UGA player, it saddens me that we may not have the opportunity to play the Gators in the regular season. These are two great football programs and they represented us well when we played them twice a year. We will truly miss the opportunity to play them in the regular season." The 2018 schedule does not feature the typical SEC East showdown between the Bulldogs and Gators, but Georgia has a non-conference matchup scheduled against Cincinnati. The Bulldogs will open on Aug. 31 against Chattanooga, while Florida will play Tulane. Georgia coach Kirby Smart said that he hopes to have a "better schedule" in 2019. The addition of Navy to the schedule will make the 2019 Georgia slate a little more difficult. Florida coach Dan Mullen wasn't exactly happy when the news broke that Georgia would play Chattanooga. "It's disappointing to hear, 3e33713323
