Cortical activation in random partial coherence spectroscopy processing. Random partial coherence (RPC) spectroscopy performs statistical spectral analysis to remove the signal-induced noise of the frequency-domain spectra. To investigate the effects of RPC processing on the cortical activation in such a neuroimaging technique, this paper presents the result of a preliminary study using intracranial electroencephalogram (iEEG). Six focal epilepsy patients were examined. Compared with full coherence (FC), the cortical activities in the alpha and beta bands were reduced with RPC processing in three of six cases, increased in one case, and unchanged in the other. It suggests that RPC processing can influence the cortical activation.

Q: Why do I have to add space after the quotation marks in MATLAB? I have a variable, which holds some text in it: `mytext = 'asdf'`; I want to use this variable in a function as a label: `function y=foo(x) y = str2double(mytext); end` However, I get this error: `invalid string literal (type'single')` If I do this, everything works: `function y=foo(x) y = str2double(mytext); end` Why is it so? Shouldn't the variable `mytext` be a string in device, an electric power supply is connected to an electrode which is supported on a partitioning wall partitioning a space into a spinning nozzle chamber and a spinning head chamber from which a spinning head is protruded into the spinning nozzle chamber. The electrode of the conventional spinning nozzle type sludge acid desludging device is formed by inserting a lead pipe having a suitable length, into which a silver powder and a glass fiber are mixed, and then processing and removing the outer periphery of the lead pipe. Since the conventional electrode is formed by inserting the lead pipe having a length of 20 cm into which a silver powder and a glass fiber are mixed, a distal end of the electrode protrudes 8 cm above the surface of the partitioning wall, so that electric contact of the electrode with the sewage becomes
