When did you start the beard, how did you grow it, what did you do to keep it looking clean and fresh, how do you keep it looking like this? If your beard has stopped growing in size or shape for whatever reason you will need to alter the ways you look after it in order to get back to an ideal beard growth state. When your beard is growing normally you know exactly what needs to happen, the beard growth will keep at a steady pace and there will be little to worry about and no direction to alter. When it slows down it is time to read up on everything to find out what is going wrong and how you can remedy it. The first thing you need to do is to get out the mirror and see if the beard is looking right. A beard that is not growing in the right direction can become uneven and unkempt. If it looks red or ragged you will need to shave it to remove the excess hair that is tangling up the hair follicles. When it is only growing at one side of the face you will be able to see this and it will look more even. If the beard does seem to be growing in uneven patches you will need to use a beard comb to straighten it out. Once you have combed it out you will need to make sure it is very well conditioned. Beards can get dry and hard if neglected. This will cause itching and rashes under the face. Use plenty of moisturizing cream to help keep the beard soft and to prevent dehydration. A very common problem is that the beard is not growing anywhere near fast enough. When this is the case you will notice bald spots growing between the beard hair, this is because the hair follicles are not producing enough hair. If this is happening you will need to adjust your diet and exercise routine in order to get things moving. Eating healthily by avoiding junk food and more vegetables and exercising by walking regularly will help to keep
