MISSOURI PACIFIC RAILROAD COMPANY, Respondent, v. DEPARTMENT OF EMPLOYMENT SECURITY, Appellant. No. 45291. Supreme Court of Minnesota. December 22, 1971. *494 John M. Mason, St. Paul, for appellant. Willian E. Schroyer, Asst. Fire Protection Atty., St. Paul, for respondent Earle Herman Williams. Ronald E. Schutz, Legal Counsel, Department of Employment Security, St. Paul, for appellant. OPINION MURPHY, Justice. The department of employment security appeals from an order of the district court reversing a decision of the compensation judge, which decision affirmed a determination by the deputy commissioner in an award of claimant for sickness and total disability benefits.

Claimant, a 53-year-old man, became ill in June 1969. He had been out of work for 11 years and although he was considered to be a qualified welder in the railroad industry, he had been unable to get work. The determination of total disability was based on an impairment rating of 15 percent of the whole man. Medical evidence was taken by the deputy commissioner on November 17, 1969, but he did not schedule a hearing until June 10, 1970. The deputy commissioner in June 1970 found that the evidence failed to show that the claimant's condition was permanent and stationary as required by the act. He found, however, that the claimant was temporarily totally disabled from June 18, 1969, through June 18, 1970. The evidence showed that at the time of the taking of the medical evidence in November 1969 claimant had performed odd jobs but that he had no employable skills. His medical condition was diagnosed as primary hypertension and cardiac disease by a Dr. Chu, one of the examining physicians. The following opinions were given by other doctors who examined claimant: 1. A neurologist 648931e174
