This blog will show the general development of the different features of the 3ds Max 2011 in the course of the next weeks. PowerInBusiness is happy to provide our readers with reliable technical and also hand held solutions to make the 3ds max an effective and successful tool to improve your bussiness. Follow us via RSS Feed Thursday, April 12, 2011 3ds Max 2011: Timeline 2.1.6 The second version of the timeline is here! The big new feature is the speed when switching between user time and clock time. Time translates in relative and absolute values. The relational values, which are without display will be turned off or shown in separate window for a better view. Now the animations will be better in the timeline. You can now clone the timeline items so you can create without endless editing. You have the possibility to add timeline sections so you can utilize the timeline as if you could use tb. You can activate the Arrange option so the timeline can be arranged per scenes. Also a new feature that I have been desining for a while is the support for multiple next frame views in the scene view. So you can switch between the scenes and see the same frame in all of them. When you enable the show edit time for timeline bars and labels, they are displayed now also in the timeline bar controls. Also the progress bar of the property animation is displayed now. So first look at the big picture for the timeline. The new template supports up to four different timelines where you can move through the scenes. You can create new timelines
