Our room electrician told us that a single load resistive lamp in the bathroom has a problem. If he unplugged it we could see a fire. He said to check it out. I don't really understand what causes the problem, what is the problem or why would something get so hot that it can burn you. And then the other thing is that he says that the lamp is halogen and why would a halogen lamp be hot. Any ideas? A: Since I cannot comment nor vote, I'll provide you a comment. If the lamp has a low voltage (around 6V), the color temperature will be high (e.g. in the order of 2000K -

When quantifying adiponectin levels in the circulation, the same normalisation factor is applied to data obtained from ELISA and RIA methods. However, the functional meaning of the different isoforms is species specific \[@pone.0143223.ref026]\]. Hence, there is a need for accurate quantification of total adiponectin and of the functional isoforms. Several protein isoforms could be present in individual circulating blood samples. The use of different quantification methods can lead to the inclusion or exclusion of individual protein isoforms in the numerator or the denominator of an analytical outcome. As a consequence, these results should be interpreted with caution. To avoid the effect of quantification of protein isoforms in the analytical outcome the use of reference protein standards is recommended for the quantification of adiponectin \[@pone.0143223.ref027]\]. For instance, in a study aiming to quantify the functionality of adiponectin, the native adiponectin in plasma was compared with a recombinant adiponectin in a dose-response RIA. The total adiponectin-to-recombinant adiponectin ratio was inversely correlated with whole-body fat mass in healthy men \[[@pone.0143223.ref027]\]. While this ratio is not a direct estimate of total adiponectin, it suggests that the RIA estimate of total
