You've finally graduated from your family business, scouring the surface of Venus for profitable investment opportunities. In Earth's orbit, the cloudtops are ripe with potential—just look at their sappy, mother-loving reception to intergalactic space trash. You have the cash to invest, so long as you focus your efforts on the largest per-unit investment available: Colonize Venus. Your family has been running the business for generations, so you know the Venezulean market like the back of your hands. So why not take your new 'experience' and transform your family into the greatest space-faring enterprise the Solar System has ever seen? Gravity Gun Studio's latest prototype (and arguably their magnum opus) has been getting rave reviews by critics and gamers alike. With its fast and furious free-for-all gameplay, it seems like the natural evolution of the studio's previous games, Spaceteam and AlienVault. In fact, the company's co-founder John Leek and his crew are in the process of putting together a Kickstarter to fund a full (and expanded) version of the game—all while the Free Steam Edition remains available. Unlike traditional strategy games, Gravity Gun pits two teams of three (or four) players against each other, with each player occupying a different role. Gravity Gun's "story mode" is limited to four games, with the players all competing to accumulate the most points. A number of tutorial videos and the game's instruction manual are now online and contain helpful tips for new players. By comparing results to an online database of playtime, he concludes that many long-time Spacebase DF-9 players may actually be in the grip of a kind of computer-induced 'torture disorder'. The individual, he suggests, is "very vulnerable to engaging in online video games", losing "hours and hours of precious time in order to play. It's inevitable." He claims that the prevalence of the problem in the Spacebase DF-9 community is at least four times higher than in the general population. He's not sure if there is a remedy for this malady, or even if it will eventually leave the afflicted feeling any less tortured (he cites the example of Tom Cruise on the set of the first Mission: Impossible and training for the film). Flank pain is a common finding, and its etiology ranges from benign to malignant. Computed tomography is a useful imaging modality to evaluate patients with flank pain, and computed tomography findings vary with the etiology. The radiologist should be familiar with the roles of computed tomography in the evaluation of flank pain to avoid misinterpretations. Careful review of patient history and of images should help identify etiologies that mimic other pathologic conditions. Clinically relevant abdominal pathologic conditions and alternative causes of flank pain are covered in this article.Q: What kind of batteries were used in old style commercial rechargeable flashlight batteries? I've inherited a set of what appear to be old light batteries, some still have a little liquid in the tube as an indicator of the amount of power remaining. Since the size of the tube is inconsistent with the usual AA battery size they may be some unknown type of battery. What kind of batteries are these and are they safe to use? A little research on the web shows they are commonly available, but I found no mention of a company name. A: At the time (mid to late 70's, late 70's to early 80's) these were identified as "Regular" or "XL" "High Capacity" or "Super" type batteries. Kerala is a state from Southern India in India and has a population of about 38 million as per the 2001 census. Kerala has a number of unique stories to tell; for example, Kerala is the only Indian state where nature has bestowed its gift of a thousand beautiful beaches. Kerala is called the Queen of the seas. Can you imagine the vicious circular industry generating water which shapes the scenarios that the people in Kerala pursue? This means that the state gives unimaginable examples in terms of culture and prosperity. The topography of Kerala is such that it snuggles in between the Arabian Sea and the Western Ghats. These two regions put Kerala in a position where the state is the destination of tourists who want to experience nature; it is the perennial heart beat of the abode of myriads of common people. This state attracts visitors who are attracted by its unique roadside mini villages with local restaurants who are ready to provide locals with the Tamil Nadu delicacy daal-biryani. Kerala is one of the states from South that has plunged itself into the world of technology with the assistance of the state machinery. Kerala is using Science and Technology as an engine for growth. It is a traditional state where in one could find religious and industrial ideologies at the same time. It is a state that runs a hedonistic lifestyle with a progressive state machine. This state has a high literacy rate of more than 95%. Mlecchas or the natives of this state are proverbially rich. It is a state where the capital through globalization has become a major port that covers over 40,000 sq kms. Now, Kerala has surged up as the highest performing state in the competition. The state has the potential to operate globally in the long run because of its unique culture and people.
