There is so much to explore in this game and you are rewarded for finding and exploring every corner of the beautifully crafted world. You will come across many wonderful things along the way and by the time you are finished you will be addicted to it. " -Ludwig von Löwenherz "Vardoran is a fast paced, third person shooter game with plenty of side quests, exploration, and combat. The combat is incredibly fun, and most of the weapons have upgrades through gameplay as well.  from the Sink Below by Jason from the comments section. After reading the full post and Jason's response I think this is a interesting question worth exploring. Who are the major killers in this game: the vampires or humans? It's already been touched on that the vampires benefit from the contact; they can speak to humans and feed on them, so why are they seen as threats and not as benevolent allies? But, what about their zombie-like allies? What happens to them when the vampires are not around? What about their other companion, Drake? Resentment is what keeps the zombies coming back, and why they sometimes put a stake through the heart of their puppets. Zombies are not a mindless, skin-eating horde. They hate the vampires, but they hate outsiders even more. Their hatred (and envy of the newcomers) is compounded by their shared history of enslavement and enslavement to the vampires. What do they know about vampires, other than they've been enslaved by some of the most powerful, the most insular, and the most ruthless of the vampires. Zombies want to take down the vampires; they do not want to be the ones who feed on the evil that has been done to them. The fact that the humans (and a few other races) are taking over, going into manor and knocking out the vampires, while the zombies mope around feeling sorry for themselves, may make a few of the vampires begin to doubt their old made-up stories that it is all about madness and control, while the humans are dangerous and evil. In terms of the vampires, just because the vampires believe zombies are mindless, savage beasts does not mean that it has anything to do with human qualities. What a group of sadistic creatures concocted a belief and internalized it, do not mean the beings themselves are sadistic. If it was just the vampires and their "mortal enemies" zombies, then yes, I believe it would be the vampires that would be offed. But, when the vampires have allies in place, the enemies are every bit as dangerous. Who are the major killers in this game: the vampires or humans? It's already been touched on that the vampires benefit from the contact; they can speak to humans and feed on them, so why are they seen as threats and not as benevolent allies?
