The mammalian target of rapamycin (mTOR) is a serine/threonine kinase and is found in two different complexes named mTORC1 and mTORC2. These complexes are characterized by a distinct set of components, including a unique set of regulatory proteins. mTOR is activated by nutrient and oxygen availability and it controls the cell cycle, angiogenesis, DNA damage repair, autophagy, cellular metabolism and responses to inflammatory cytokines. Hence, the mTOR signalling pathway is intimately involved in a variety of physiological processes. Its deregulation is, however, implicated in the pathogenesis of many human diseases, including cancer. In this review, we summarize the role
