v.4.2.1.Incl.PatchandKeygen-R2R.Apostle Paul standing in his stockade, with letters from those that had come to him, and from all who had heard of his ministry (Acts 26:9-10). Who should we look to for wisdom? Are we seeking God in those who have benefited from His wisdom? Many people seem to think that they are wise, but are they any wiser than others who have not benefited from the light of God's revelation? Do they not spend their time with those who are inferior to themselves? If we don't learn to enjoy and to value the life of those who have lived without the sight of God's wisdom, we will be like the ant that eats his own foot, or the bear that gnaws his own tail. We should always be looking for the wise and the good. But when we find them we need to remember that our knowledge does not carry with it infallibility. We must learn how to seek God's wisdom by listening to others who have enjoyed Him and who have benefited from His wisdom. The Bible tells us that "the fear of the Lord is the beginning of wisdom". We must learn to fear God.
