Effects of different rescue strategies on the number of premature red blood cells collected in a volunteer-based apheresis campaign. Aim To investigate the effect of different rescue strategies on the number of blood units collected in a volunteer-based apheresis campaign.

Methods In this retrospective, observational study, all variables of interest were extracted from the institutional data archive for the period between May and December 2018. Data from all volunteers that undertook apheresis sessions for any of the two campaigns were included in this study, resulting in 717 eligible subjects. Results Rescue success rates and hemolysis rates were similar between campaigns. However, the number of blood units collected decreased significantly with increasing red blood cells (RBCs) filtered per unit and higher delivered median flow rates.

Furthermore, a similar decrease was observed for increasing blood pump speed and the number of RBCs filtered.

Interestingly, a decrease was also observed for increased hematocrit values.

Conclusion This study demonstrates that RBCs filtered per unit and delivered flow rates are variables that may influence the number of blood units collected in an apheresis campaign. Clinicians should consider these two variables when designing a rescue strategy.

Allied Paints announced a new line of high-gloss interior wall paints, offering a unique sense of style and modern appeal. This new high-gloss paint finish was developed to meet the needs of architects, contractors and interior designers who appreciate the integrity of the original designer colors and textures. It is also ideal for consumers who want an easy way to upgrade their interiors. Heavily textured projects require a high level of detail and are not as compatible with the other finish lines, such as CrystalVent, which are often used for applications that involve drywall finishing. High-Gloss Tinted Interior Architectural Paints is available in six colors. A dual-textured, high-gloss architectural interior finish ensures the highest level of concealment. Designer stains, paints and wallcoverings that feature a rich, vivid color are popular with architects and contractors. The availability of customizable colors offers clients the opportunity to create the most beautiful interior spaces. Allied Paints is one of the largest paint and coating distributors in the world. It has been operating the largest interiorsaint brand in the United
