We sought to evaluate the usefulness of color Doppler flow imaging (CDFI) for thyroid veins to predict thyroglossal duct (TGD) flow that will be visualized with selective thyroglobulin (Tg) immunocytochemical staining of the puncture needle after successful transvenous cannulation. Thirty patients with differentiated thyroid carcinoma who underwent preoperative venous sampling were included in this retrospective study. After determination of the location of the thyroid veins on CDFI images, the patient was moved on a lateral decubitus table. Two hours later, after a pyriform sinus puncture, 1000 µg of Tg was injected followed by injection of 20 ml of normal saline. The Tg was demonstrated by immunocytochemical staining using the "Thyroglobulin" Antibody (Dako, Denmark). If the TGD was not visualized within two hours after Tg injection, the surgery was canceled. All of the patients underwent total or near-total thyroidectomy and central lymph node dissection. We found the thyroid veins at the paratracheal area in 15 (50.0%), at the aortic arch in six (20).

We studied T cells from different anatomic compartments of patients with rheumatoid arthritis (RA) or systemic lupus erythematosus (SLE) by in vitro immunization with IgG or IgM myeloma protein. With the patients' cells, it was shown that the inflammatory arthritis disease was associated with an increased synthesis of IgG and IgM antibody by the B cell clone of the disease. In addition to this finding, we made several observations. (1) Subsets of T cells of the affected compartments in RA or SLE were shown to be able to secrete IgM- and IgG-containing monoclonal rheumatoid factor (RF) antibody. (2) The data strongly suggest that IgM- and IgG1-containing monoclonal RFs were derived from IgG and IgM myeloma proteins that had originally been secreted by B cells of these respective compartments. A large proportion of the area, it is believed, consists of mechanoreceptors which respond to distension. The portal region of the stomach is acidic, and probably has an additional role in absorption of foodstuffs. Gastrin is a likely factor in the normal synthesis of the pepsinogen granules which contain the proteases required for the digestion of food. The normal pattern of gastrin release from the G cells is achieved by a negative feedback system, the enzyme histidine decarboxylase being the primary factor in the feedback loop.
