In previous studies, replication-deficient adenoviral vectors have been used to induce gene transfer to the CNS and other organs in non-human primates (NHPs). However, the ability of these vectors to infect and transduce primary neurons has not been established in vitro. Furthermore, it is unknown whether adenoviral replication is required for gene transfer in the CNS and other organs. To characterize an efficient and specific system for NHPs, we developed and characterized a helper-free adenoviral system for the NHPs. The E1A region and the E2A region of human adenovirus 5 were inserted into pTk-betaGal vector in which the lacZ gene was substituted with the lac operator to increase the copy number of the recombinant adenoviral vector. The replication-deficient adenoviral vector system showed high efficiency of gene transfer to the CNS and other organs in NHPs. The beta-galactosidase-positive cells were detected at 1 week after the intranasal injection of the adenoviral vector and the beta-galactosidase staining persisted for up to 8 weeks. The E1A region but not the E2A region was necessary for viral replication in NHPs.

These results suggest that the helper-free adenoviral vector system will be useful for NHPs. The growing cost of school districts underfunding their K-12 pensions and accumulating $34 billion of debt has prompted the California Teachers' Retirement System (CalPERS) to lean on lawmakers to do something about the glaring "funding hole" that has drained the pension system by more than $44 billion over the past decade, according to the San Francisco Chronicle. During this time, the California Public Employees' Retirement System (CalPERS) has
