Let me preface this post by saying I'm not the world's biggest chocolate lover, just someone who likes finding new things to try and enjoying the occasional chocolate bar. But the other day, I found myself faced with the opportunity to try something different in the food world and it's proven to be a very enriching experience for myself. The whole saga started with a Facebook ad from a friend of mine, who was completely off the wall when it came to low-carb and vegan chocolate bars. The plan was to travel to France to go into a chocolatier and make it official: I'll never buy a chocolate bar again and keep drinking milk. (sarcasm) Okay, I promise to take her advice down a couple of notches. Sensing my desire to test the waters, here's what she offered me: a box of vegan dark chocolate bars from Nutiva. I tried them all, but the ones I absolutely loved were a rich dark chocolate bar which came from the Midwest and a yummy coconut milk bar from Australia. I started thinking that these bars, in the local stores here, are really expensive - around RM55 (AU$16, UK£8) a bar. Then I'd say to myself, how nice it'd be to find something which is more reasonably priced but which is as good or even better. Imagine the look on my dad's face when he found out I was paying less for a chocolate bar (that's what my dad likes to say - less is more) and he could share the experience with me. As you can see, I've had so much fun with the experience that I'm not going to quit chocolate just yet. A word on the chocolate The bars from my friends (in the Midwest and Australia) are made with fair-trade cacao from
