PhotoStudio, available as an Adobe CS6 Photography add-on, allows users to view, organize, and sort pictures using RAW files as well. Basic and Expert Color Adjustments: Allows adjustment of color, white balance, saturation, and exposure. Duotone Creator: Creates true duotones, a special type of color print. Fluid Canvas: Allows users to work in an untethered environment, allowing them to view, resize, and move image layers. Layers : Allows you to make multiple layers, each of which can be individually edited or adjusted. Mask : Allows you to selectively apply changes to specific areas of an image. Panoramics : Allows you to create a 360-degree image. Professional and Simplified Photo Editing : Allows you to adjust exposure, saturation, white balance, and contrast. Smart Sharpen : Creates a high-quality, soft-edged, blurred image. Spot Healing Brush : Allows users to manipulate one or more areas of an image to fix issues caused by small blemishes. Paint Brush : Allows users to click in an area of an image to see a window with a selection tool that enables users to select an area within a larger image. Oil Paint: Allows users to give photos an oil-painting-like look. Pencil : Creates a "soft" pencil sketch. Numerous other features include: Removing unwanted elements from a photo (such as a red-eye effect that occurs when people blink). Correcting chromatic aberration. Update, 7:40 p.m.: MSNBC's Chris Matthews was caught in a deception — again. Even though Matthews has spent years saying Democratic presidential nominee Hillary Clinton is fudging her health records and hiding medical information from the public, he shows up on air tonight as a “fact witness” during a commercial break. Matthews is also seen on the set during the segment with Hillary's longtime doctor, Dr. Lisa Bardack — no longer her internist, as Matthews reported Tuesday. From MSNBC, here's the transcript: REPORTER: He said, “As far as the case of pneumonia, it's a credibility issue.” Now, people who are, I think, you know, well-informed are saying that maybe the pneumonia was connected to the fact that Hillary Clinton fell and hit her head when she got caught up in her secret service van in July. Is that a possibility for you? CHRIS MATTHEWS: Well, on the day that Hillary Clinton fell in New York, she went and had a checkup. And remember, New York is the most regulated state in America for health regulations. And she was recorded in August. And she was asked about when she fell and what had happened to her. And she said, “Well, I had a plate of food and it hit me in the head.” CHRIS MATTHEWS: But then in September, she had a doctor who diagnosed her with, you know, an episode of “sinus stress,” which at the time was said to be a factor in her concussion. So, she went to Mayo and had an MRI and four more tests on her head. And then Dr. Bardack's notes say, “After the physical examination on 10/12/2016, the patient complained of worsening of symptoms from a concussion. Based on the patient's history, I'm concerned about a possible post-concussion syndrome.” She was given a diagnosis of post-concussion syndrome with headaches. CHRIS MATTHEWS: She was getting what we call “sinus stress” for a long period of time. “Yeah, I know, I'm under medical care,” she would say. “I didn't want to worry them. I have to sleep it off.” I wonder if anybody else thought you

A flow cytometry-based functional study of the human airway microenvironment: epithelial and cell surface molecules as in vivo biomarkers. Functional knowledge of the microenvironment of the human airway is lacking and will be essential to understand the role of the bronchial airway in lung disease and to evaluate the effect of treatments. The aim of the study was to explore the heterogeneity of the bronchial epithelial cell surface in vitro by a flow cytometry-based functional approach. The panel of cell surface markers was analyzed by flow cytometry as markers of epithelial differentiation and activation in airway epithelial cells exposed to inflammatory stimuli. Cytokeratin (CK) 5 and 17 were expressed in only a subset of epithelial cells. The application of a panel of cell surface markers enabled us to discriminate non-epithelial cells. The results indicated that in vitro airway epithelial cells display expression of various cell surface markers in response to inflammatory stimulation with respect to epithelial differentiation and activation. Reflecting the disposition of KU as a rank-1 public research university, our students, faculty and staff often find our campus beautiful. But if we haven't already, we would like to take this opportunity to point out two areas that are in need of immediate attention -- perhaps not trivial, yet far from insignificant. A review of recent events has led us to recognize that we've established a pattern that appears to be persisting into the late fall of 2016 and likely for the rest of the calendar year, if not beyond
