I'm having a hard time finding a non-dubious answer to my question, to which: why chat is not provided as a commercial service, and why it is a community powered service?. A: Chat is being sunset for various reasons. First, when you go to chat now, you get a wall of ads. Not a good user experience, for everyone. You can still chat, but it's hard to get a consistent experience. Second, there is no canonical way to have chat available for everyone. We have a chat room for every site, and even then, that room is intended for a discussion about the site itself. We have a chat room for Stack Overflow and another for Stack Overflow Meta. There are a dozen chat rooms on the site for other sites. In addition, chat is an ad-driven system, and the ad system isn't perfect. We don't want to hit our users with ads they don't want. Ad blockers are a thing. Further, chat tends to be very chatty. We don't want that. We want the sites we support to be professional, and chat doesn't tend to be professional. All in all, chat has had it's moment, and we're re-evaluating what we want it to be.
