The core of the new feature is the “Head Motion Reality,” a customizable avatar that can be powered by the actual player data. This is used not only to enhance goalkeepers, whose movements are vital to blocking the ball in, but to create an effective AI system that is more consistent than ever before. The AI is “deeply linked” to player motions, meaning that a player running down the wing is a threat for a passing player on the opposite wing, as this player would be following the motion of the attacking player. The “Standard” in-match intelligence system of FIFA 21 is replaced with a new tactical system based on a new HUD that allows for instant action on-the-go. The overall depth of the gameplay is also deeper than before and the ball physics system is even more responsive, managing the risk-reward of every situation. When the ball hits a player’s head it tends to follow and crumple in a gruesome way that was never before possible and this new feature also allows for greater unpredictability in the ball physics.
