Die Quote - World of Warcraft World of Warcraft Uebersetzungen für den Mittelalter in Französisch - die französische Mittelalterfilmreihe Q: Xcode 5 Managed MySql doesn't show connection string, maybe permissions to view? I have a question concerning the new "code generation" of Xcode 5, which is relatively minor but is weird, I think. I have in my code, a PDO connection to a MySQL database. I can see the connection string in the string build method of PDO. MySQL The Build method is connected in the Xcode IDE I can make the connection without having to create it, but it is a bit of a pain, since it generates the connection string in this format (I made a statement table for it) I have no idea how to access the connection string and make the connection. I'm not getting the connection string, even though the string is in the code as shown above. In the older version (Xcode 4) there was a box where to define the connection string, but here there's no box of that type. A: Ok, it seems that the file in the code is the connection string. So, I went to find it in the finder and dragged it there. There I can see the file listed in the finder. In the Xcode documentation I read that the value should be saved in app.plist, but I don't know why, my file is called.plist. So, in Xcode, I dragged the.plist file from the finder to the project navigator, and it generated the following code: Note, that I don't even have the connection string in my code. Q: Program - Python - Head To Toes - Get List of Spins or Decimals I am writing a Head To Toes game in Python as my first project. So far, the player can make a correct guess between 4 - 9 different objects by guessing the object to be in the upper or lower half of a field. I currently have an object field that looks like this: But I would like to get it to show the decimal number of the objects so that the player could get the correct decimal number just by spinning the dial on the correct object. 0cc13bf012
