Duncan and Maduin, wanderers of a world on the brink of a war. One of them is an air mage, the other is a rogue, the other an infantryman... The one thing they have in common is that they both have the same last name. Gentle, but tough, they are on the run, having escaped from a firm that took over their town and refused to pay them their wages. Now they must leave in search of answers, discover the truth, and right a much bigger wrong than any of them could have ever imagined. But they have their work cut out for them. Enemies will be fought by their hands and arms, across the land and through the labyrinthine underworld, because the two are still very much alive. And their search will take them through the depths of time and space.

Non-NMDA receptor-mediated nitric oxide production in the rat spinal dorsal horn after nerve injury. The involvement of nitric oxide in neuropathic pain remains controversial. Previous studies in isolated spinal cord preparations from newborn rats have shown that cultured spinal neurons produce nitric oxide through the activation of N-methyl-D-aspartate (NMDA) receptors, but it is not known whether this is also true in adult rats. The present study tested the hypothesis that nitric oxide is produced by spinal neurons through the activation of NMDA receptors after nerve injury in adult rats. This was tested by measuring nitrite and nitrate, the stable metabolites of nitric oxide, in dorsal horn of the spinal cord. Electrical stimulation of sciatic nerve at 1 Hz and a N(omega)-nitro-L-arginine (L-NNA)-induced hyperalgesia were used as indexes of nitric oxide production. The presence of NMDA receptors was tested by investigating the effect of ketamine on L-NNA-induced hyperalgesia. In naive rats, L-NNA induced a dose-related hyperalgesia that was reversed by ketamine. Mechanical allodynia was not observed after L-NNA administration. In rats with a unilateral chronic constriction injury of the sciatic nerve, mechanical allodynia developed within one day after the operation and was reversed by ketamine, but L-NNA had no effect on this hyperalgesia. Nitrite and nitrate were significantly increased in the dorsal horn of the lumbar segment of the spinal cord contralateral to the injury. In contrast, mechanical allodynia and

Tick Tock Bang Bang is a 2009 American comedy film directed by Richard Benjamin and featuring Nick Nolte, Paul Scheer, Mark Harelik, Bill Cobbs, and Phil Cornish. It was written and produced by Matt Stone and Trey Parker of South Park fame. The film revolves around a group of men in New York City who have been sent to prison because they were charged with having failed to report the 9/11 attacks to the American government. The story of what the characters do while in prison was conceived and initially produced for South Park's "Marcel's Revenge" Christmas special, airing on December 25, 2007. Since airing, the show's writers have used outtakes from the special to do story ideas for future episodes. The final product was then developed as a theatrical film with director Richard Benjamin and Stone and Parker as the executive producers. Although the film was in post-production in 2009, it had a limited release on May 6, 2009. The film was moderately well received by critics, but did not fare as well at the box office as the director's previous works. Plot On the morning of September 11, 2001, the Twin Towers of the World Trade Center in New York City were destroyed in a terrorist attack known as the September 11 attacks. At the time, the men who perpetrated the attacks had been in the United States in the past, staying in the country under false identities and then returning to their native Saudi Arabia to take part in the attacks. In the years after September 11, the United States began to demolish the two 110-story towers at the World Trade Center, arguing that they represented a danger to the American people after the attacks. Without motive, the United States government labeled 17 architects, engineers, construction workers, workers repairing light switches and measuring tape and metal casing for the WTC as "Fugitives from American Justice" and took them to federal prison. The engineers were the first to be deported to their native Saudi Arabia because of the historically tight ties the country has with the Muslim world. A few hours after they arrived, an unmarked van pulls up to the prison gate and drops off two of the engineers. The van then leaves without its passengers. The men previously deported wear new, clean clothes while the other men who were not deported dress conservatively and wear traditional Islamic clothing. An hour later, the van returns and, this time, there are four men, two of whom are wearing tennis shoes. The van is driven into
