The question is below. Two atomic atoms A and B are at the same time holding at the state "a" for half a second, they are so close to each other that their wave functions are overlapping. Can A be in the state "a" for the rest of time? If the answer is negative, please give me the reasoning why. A: The wave functions of two oscillating charged particles are related by a Fourier transform. The Schrödinger equation is a linear partial differential equation so an initial solution will remain linear through time. However, the assumption of two distinct particles is not an assumption, it is just a question of preparing the state of the system. If a single particle were to be in a superposition of "a" and "b" with the wave function $\psi(x,t) = \psi_a(x) \exp(-i \omega_a t) + \psi_b(x) \exp(-i \omega_b t)$ then, assuming no interference, the other particle would maintain the same wave function. However, if the wave functions have a smaller spatial overlap then there would be less of a contribution from the other wave function, and for the first part of the time that the overlapping wave functions maintain the same frequency the contribution of one wave function would decrease. Eventually the interference would destroy the coherence and
