I will point out the following: the informal way the translator uses = to keep the names identical (in Spanish, the informa is a verb not a preposition) the Latin in the source language (where it originally appears in the book) is used in the translation that the last sentence of the source text contains the word "lo", not "el" the word "serie" in both source and target text. In translation, the most important point is to achieve an accurate translation (especial keywords, collocators etc. will not help much). I would use Perseus to detect the occasional use of Latin (we would get a list of related words). This might be helpful to check for
