The first version of AutoCAD was commercialized as PCD II, which in turn was originally conceived as a desktop version of the United States Military's Computer-Aided Design Center's Design Center II. The second version of PCD, Release 1.0 in 1983, released as Autocad, was the first commercially successful autoCAD product. The first version of Autocad was commercialized as PCD II, which in turn was originally conceived as a desktop version of the United States Military's Computer-Aided Design Center's Design Center II. The second version of PCD, Release 1.0 in 1983, released as Autocad, was the first commercially successful autoCAD product. In 2004, Autodesk released AutoCAD LT as a dedicated light-duty version of AutoCAD, designed for smaller projects. In 2006, Autodesk re-branded Autocad LT to AutoCAD Architectural Desktop. In 2013, Autodesk released AutoCAD 3D to provide for 3D modeling. In 2017, Autodesk announced the release of AutoCAD Architecture, which is Autocad for home remodeling, and AutoCAD for home inspection. History of AutoCAD AutoCAD is the third major computer-aided design (CAD) product line released by Autodesk, after AutoCAD and DGN. AutoCAD originally consisted of two CAD products: Autocad and DGN. In 2008, Autocad and DGN were unified into a single application called AutoCAD. After DGN was discontinued in 2000, Autodesk designed Autocad to be the successor to both AutoCAD and DGN. AutoCAD was first introduced to the public in November 1983, at the First International Symposium on CAD in North America (ISCAAN), in Los Angeles. The first version of AutoCAD was originally called PCD II (Professional Component Design II), and was developed by Autodesk, the U.S. Army's Computer-Aided Design Center, and The Mathworks for the United States Military for the system engineering support program called the Computer-Aided Design Center (CADC) in the 1980s. AutoCAD is written entirely in C++, with basic windowing and 3D capabilities implemented using OpenGL and DirectX. Autodesk has released several major versions

Although recent evidence suggests that the female age, male age, female gender, presence of tubal factor and previous IVF cycles are risk factors of ovarian aging, there is no evidence that factors related to poverty influence ovarian reserve (OR). A total of 398 women with BMI ≤ 30 were included; 44% were low-income women (LW) and 56% were high-income women (HW). Comparison between these groups showed that both groups had similar age (29.9 vs. 30.2 years), male age (32.6 vs. 33.2 years), duration of infertility (4.4 vs. 4.2 years), positive pregnancy test (89.4 vs. 88.4%), average number of IVF cycles per woman (0.89 vs. 0.97), and live birth rate per couple (38.4 vs. 37.5%). It was found that LW had higher values of the peak FSH (14.9 vs. 12.7 IU/L), basal FSH (10.5 vs. 8.7 IU/L), basal anti-Mullerian hormone (AMH) (1.2 vs. 0.8 ng/ml), follicles with a mean diameter of ≥ 18 mm (1.4 vs. 0.9), as well as smaller ovarian volume (3.0 vs. 5.2 cm(3)). The multivariate analysis showed that only the presence of endometriosis and insemination with fresh embryos were independently associated with OR ca3bfb1094
