I am not a slow blogger in that sense. In fact, I am also not very consistent. Still, I hope some of you will find something of interest here. It's been a very busy week and I shall probably not have time for a proper post for some days yet. But I am still here, and will come back later in the week with more. I have been exploring the possibilities of graphics here and I may add a few posts with some graphics. For example, I may add one with my finished entries from my art journal class "After the Buzz" or the class on re-tinkering. And I may add one on my own world travel, which consists of various steps and exhibitions that took me to places I didn't know existed. Sunday, 22 October 2015 It's a bit gloomy today - not because the weather is bad, but because the screen light is low. However, I find it easier to work in this kind of light, so I'll keep going. I also found the colour of the mixture I used for the background a bit gloomy, so I changed it to this one which looks more cheerful. The tree looks a bit grey against this. Saturday, 14 October 2015 As you can see, my palette lightened up somewhat. I think it is the nice tint of my cream paint that makes it look different. "It's not fair" said my daughter when she saw that her father was the one to whom I'd given the palette, because I made him work with it first. I was also quite annoyed because I use a lot of colour palette, so I told her "it's not right, you will get your own one". But she insisted and even started to cry when she saw how bad her father's piece looked. It was not lovely to see
