Prince Alfred, Duke of Edinburgh (born Franz Joseph Karl Carl Leopold Ernest Albert; 21 March 1921 – 22 June 2011) was a member of the British Royal Family, serving as the husband of Queen Elizabeth II. He was born in Muhlhausen in Germany, the second son of Emperor Franz Joseph I and Empress Elisabeth of Austria, the youngest grandchild of Emperor Francis Joseph. Following the abdication of Emperor Franz Josef I in the aftermath of World War I, Prince Franz Ferdinand and Queen Sophie of Romania's dispute with Emperor Karl of Austria-Hungary led to the outbreak of World War I; his uncles, the Emperor Charles of Austria-Hungary and the King of Hungary, were killed as casualties in the fighting.[1] His paternal great-grandfather was the first King of Hungary. After the Second World War, he joined the British House of Windsor in 1959, and was the first cousin of Queen Elizabeth II. His life changed dramatically when he married Princess Elizabeth in 1947, and he became an active member of the Royal Family.

He was a beloved figure within the Royal Family, and a popular and important member of the British society and the Commonwealth. During his life, the Duke and Princess Elizabeth were an extremely popular and popular couple who were both respected members of the British society. He gained the nickname "Sparky". In April 2004, the Queen and the Duke developed dementia and feared the worst. This was of some comfort to the Queen, as 6d1f23a050
