The prior art includes both horizontal and vertical concrete screeds. Horizontal screeds are used to smoothen concrete and to make it more even. Vertical screeds are used to lay concrete or stone of uniform thickness. U.S. Pat. No. 3,631,965 (Miller) discloses a horizontal concrete screed with a plurality of teeth that extend radially outward from a base plate. The teeth are evenly spaced around the periphery of the screed and are evenly spaced apart. A grooved track is provided at the end of the base plate for the screed to ride on. A disadvantage of this screed is that the teeth may dig into the concrete laying a trough in the concrete and making it less smooth. The teeth may also pack the concrete together making it more difficult to smooth. U.S. Pat. No. 4,737,937 (Harvath) discloses a horizontal concrete screed with teeth that extend radially outward from a roller that is spaced above the concrete. Spaced holes are provided for the screed to ride in. The spacing of the holes tends to allow the concrete to pack together making it more difficult to smooth. U.S. Pat. No. 4,826,290 (Wesson) discloses a horizontal concrete screed
