over the years, bmw has released several navigation systems. the latest release is the v32 navigation dvd navigation system. this is bmw's latest navigation system, and is now available in every new bmw produced. it is the fastest and most advanced of bmw's navigation systems. the v32 can track your car's location and make a map route from anywhere. it also has voice recognition, a voice-to-text and bluetooth capabilities. the lack of a cd drive for most users is not a drawback, as many of the cd-based navigation systems have lost their value. in the modern age of the ipod and mp3 players, most people will never need the added functionality of the cd-rom. there are a few exceptions, such as tour groups. most people will be able to use an ipod, mp3 player, or usb flash drive as a navigation device. the cd-based systems are a much better way to use them, as they can be updated more often. also, they tend to be much better looking and sound. the external antenna is of an enormous benefit for most people who use their navigation systems while driving. the cd-based navigation systems are also more cost effective. most cd-based navigation systems offer a free trial, which lasts for one year. this is a huge advantage over the cd-rom nav systems, which tend to be quite expensive. the cd-based systems can be updated online and download maps at a fraction of the cost of the cd-rom nav systems. navigation cds can be used on almost all vehicles and in almost any car-navigation system, which makes it a more universal product. in the software-only navigation systems, the map updates are often limited to certain areas or regions.

the bmw navigation hardware is very reliable and has a very long lasting battery. however, the wi-fi hotspot capabilities of the navigation computer have always been weak, and the latest mkiv / v32 version with the new software has only slightly improved the situation. if you have a mkiv computer, or any other bmw, you do not need a new navigation computer unless you desire to use a different map or view map resolution. you only need to upgrade your existing navigation computer with the latest v32 navigation software. even if your bmw is in a crate, there is no reason to upgrade unless you are planning to change the map or views. if you are not sure what model or year your navigation computer is, you can go to the bmw website and download the serial number decoder for free. you will get the model number, serial number, year, and the last 4-digits of the 12-digit vehicle id number. you can use the serial number decoder to determine whether or not your computer is a mkiv or older. the following video shows how to upgrade your mkiv navigation computer to a v32 version of the latest software (mkiv or later). i have provided a link to download the latest software (mkiv or later) and a link to download the mkiv / mkiv d30 navigation software and the mkiv upgrade key. if you want to use an mkiv computer with the bmw navigation system, this is the information you need. many bmw owners, especially those who do not like the hud, prefer to use a laptop or mobile device to navigate instead of the head up display. this can cause problems with software updates if you use a third party navigation software or update software. for example, when you use a third party navigation app or update your navigation software using the bmw cd, the software will also update the idrive head up display (hud) software. this can cause problems if you use an mkiv or later navigation computer or if you use an hud that is already running software. to avoid any problems, you need to upgrade your navigation software from an mkiv navigation computer to a v32 navigation computer. this also applies if you have an mkiv navigation computer that has already been upgraded and is running on a v27 (4-1/70) software version, such as bmw navigation systems released after v27 (4-1/70). 5ec8ef588b
