Personally I don't see this as a big problem but would welcome an explanation as to the benefits for ad network operators. Apart from a recent (12/02/2015) amendment to the EC Regulation on Privacy and Electronic Communications (RGPD), the latest release of the ECRP Directive states: "In the context of the information society and the internet, personal data shall be considered to refer to information that can be used to identify a natural person, whether directly or indirectly. Personal data shall also include data relating to the physical, physiological and mental health of a natural person, as well as biometric data. This would include, for example, data concerning a person's race, ethnicity, religious beliefs, political opinions, trade union membership, health condition, sexuality, place of residence, IP address, browsing history, and other data which is capable of identifying the natural person and which is linked to that person directly or indirectly. For example, it would include an individual's name, date of birth
